

Keeping Chickens

(the basics for raising a healthy flock)

1. Do keep your newly hatched chicks under a red, non-ceramic, heat lamp that is rated for animal use. Use a heat bulb for only the first 6-8 weeks. Do not use a white bulb.
 - Older birds. If there is light in the coop, keep food and water under it. Adult birds may have a 40w bulb (or less) for 14-16 hrs a day. Do not use a heated bulb for older birds.
2. Do provide fresh water and feed daily. Do not give cold water to new chicks.
3. Do use bedding; either white shavings or pine. Keep bedding clean and dry. Do not use cedar.
4. Do implement the appropriate treatment to guard against coccidiosis. (Amprolium)
5. Do follow USDA guidelines for introducing new birds to an existing flock by keeping them separate for 4 weeks (all ages). Clean all equipment before using. Do not mix chicks or mature birds together immediately. We do not recommend keeping baby chicks from different sources in the same brooder.
6. Do provide grit daily. Do not feed your birds grass clippings.
7. Do keep feeding your chicks an appropriate, protein-based, "starter" feed up to 6-8 weeks. Then transition grower/developer feed until your birds start laying eggs. You will then transition to a layer feed. Do feed your birds a quality poultry feed. (Follow directions on feed tags) Do not allow more than 10% of your birds' diet be in the form of treats!
8. Do continue to give your birds an Acidifier-Probiotic-Vitamin-Electrolyte Supplement (Acid Pak, Chick Boost) every 7-10 days. During times of stress (ie moving, introducing new birds, extreme weather, illness) do give additional treatment per supplement instruction. Do not let water run out or freeze!
9. Do check your birds for worms, mites and other parasites.
10. Do continue to watch your birds for signs of illness ie:
 - Lethargy
 - Loss of color in comb
 - Fluffed feathers
 - Loss of appetite
 - Not drinking
 - Changes in social behavior
 - Do not let a blocked vent (poopy butt) go unattended.

Wash hands! Use caution when handling.

Don't Kiss The Chicks!

We know they're cute. We know you love 'em
